Today's Story

On the Run at Sci-Tech A Satire News Story By Jon

Today at approximately 10:07 PM it was announced that after genetic test where performed on Jeremy and Harrison, it was found that they are in fact perfect clones. Lots of theories have been swirling around the duo after they appeared to be indistinguishable on camera. After doing a little digging we at the Sci-Tech Times were able to ascertain their origins. In the year 1987 the beings named Jeremy and Harrison where cloned in a secret Argentinian laboratory north of Bahia' Blanca. Made to be replacements for President Mauricio Macri but, do to a clerical error look nothing like the Argentinian Politician. After being deemed too dissimilar to the world leader they were released into the rain forest to forge a new life separate from society and wandered their way to the states, but after both of them receiving a bump on the head, they can't quite remember their time in Argentina or the journey north. But after several interviews both admit to strange dreams of floating in an iridescent green liquid while people spoke in Spanish as if they weren't in the room. The Argentinian government announced that they will be working to re-acquire the cloned siblings via any means necessary stating, "We truly believe that subjects 20 and 21 are property of our sovereign nation and should be returned and any information that results in the recapture will be greatly rewarded." We here at the Sci-Tech Times hope that Jeremy and Harrison can evade the south American countries' capture teams.
