Update Jay-nor's Quest

A Satire News Story By Harry

In a plot twist that could turn the tables in the war for the 6 Points Air Conditioner Units: Jay-nor the Conqueror's messenger abandoned his post in search of air conditioners for a new quest. Word has it that Sir Samwell Cohen sent a raven back to Jay-nor, informing her that he is on a new quest to find the Dictionary gods. He intends to sacrifice Jay-nor's claimed air conditioning units and his accent to the Dictionary gods also known as Merriam-Websters, and in return, the word "soccer" shall forever be changed to "football" in all American dictionaries. The Merriam-Webster gods will accept his sacrifice of the 6 points air conditioning units and his accent. The Earth will then open up around every air conditioning unit owned by every single 6 points camp and swallow them whole, and a sea witch will rise from the ocean behind him and steal his accent. As a consequence of his sacrifice to that old sea witch, from that point on he will only speak in Wingdings (or the font on Microsoft that only types in symbols). The Sci-Tech Times wishes Sir Samwell Cohen good luck on his new quest to find the Merriam-Webster Dictionary gods.
