Today's Story

Sci-Tech Counselor Makes Zombie Army

A Satire News Story By Isaac

A Sci-Tech counselor, Brett, was notably good at hypnosis, but it wasn't an issue until he hypnotized the campers to make a zombie army. The army currently controls half the kids at camp. His demands are significant, One kid to keep as a servant and complete control of Sci-Tech. We here at the Sci-Tech Times have tried to capture a zombie, and succeeded, but at the cost of three brave reporters being lost to the zombie army. The zombie we captured is shown to have a hard time opening doors and a lousy sense of sight. The most important discovery made is that spilling cold lemonade on the zombie snaps them out of the hypnosis. This fact has made the chadar ochel the headquarters of the Sci-Tech rebellion. The rebellion, lead by the kitchen staff, wish to free the hypnotized kids. "We normally hang back and watch as scary things happen," exclaimed a kitchen staff member, "but our cooking skills would prove useful here in making lemonade, and there is a rumor that hypnotized kids don't eat much and those kids need nutrition! Our chef's code won't allow us to stand by and watch this tragedy!" We here at the Sci-Tech Times advise you to stay indoors, stock up on chilled lemonade, and wish luck to the rebellion.

Bonus Satire Story By Jesse

Though his exact identity may still not be known, the Incinnemaster has remained far from silent in these past few weeks. According to rumors, the Incinnemaster has begun recruiting young superheroes into his own brand new superhero training school. This new team, which has been dubbed the "Machon," includes many new heroes, such as Iron Mind (rumored to be Hannah Jay), whose thoughts are unreadable (despite no mind reader having been discovered in the world as of yet), Time Tracker (rumored to be Daniel Shemesh), who always knows the exact time of day, and the Mayobender (rumored to be Henry Bear), who has kinetic abilities, but only when it comes to mayonnaise. The team (and their rumored identities) also includes The Rememberer (Zack Sussman), who has a photographic memory, but whenever he memorizes something, he must forget something else, The Griller (Rebecca Frey), who always knows the location of the nearest prepared grilled cheese, Square Up! (Mia Striegel), who can cut and draw perfect shapes, The Stickler (Jesse Herrnson), who can revive the stickiness of a sticker or sticky note, The Reducer (Sidney Bulgatz), who always knows if something is recyclable, and He-He-Helium (Jonah Cohn), who has the power to produce and breathe out helium. The Incinnemaster has recently purchased a space in the basement of Parsons, which he plans to turn into a lair for this new group. Coincidentally, the name on the purchase forms read Aaron Gurvis. When asked, Aaron again replied that he was not the Incinnemaster, and that "the Incinnemaster probably just used me as a fake identity because I'm a really cool guy." He then rushed off screaming about a phone booth. No matter who the Incinnemaster is, we wish him luck on this new endeavor.
